

NEW YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

New York, March 16, 1869. The noble institution known as the Sunday night concert is by no means on the wane. At first Steinway Hall was alone in its glory in this respect; but Irving Hall began to lift up its head and tune its instruments; finally, the classic Tammany has sounded its horn and proclaimed itself in advertisements regardless of expense. The history of these Sunday concerts forms a whole chapter in the biography of art. The resources adopted by their originators are of not a very startling description. Worn-out concert singers, opera singers long ago retired from the operatic stage, and sunk into the shades of music teaching, rambling Bohemian choruses, picked out from the nomadic remnants of Italian opera, musical monstrosities, and infant warblers, aitar boys from Episcopal churches, and specialties looming up from the scum of slums and music halls—these are a few of the varieties which form the attractions of the Sunday concerts. When the fall and winter season commenced, Madame Gazzanica appeared for five or six consecutive Sundays, but the public not appearing to appreciate the privilege of paying one dollar a head for listening to a worn-out voice, Madame Gazzanica withdrew, and the price of admission was lowered by over half. Since then the Steinway concerts have got on as they could, sometimes being sandwiched with amateur readings and recitations, as mildly meritorious as such performances usually are. The crowning glories of the Sunday concert season, however, were exhibited last Sunday evening at the Tammany. It was a jubilation affair. The Italian opera chorus was announced to appear, and some few of them did appear, and constituted the best part of the entertainment. There was a Bashan-bull tenor who executed some solos, but I object to capital punishment, and think there ought to be a law against public executions like that. The members of the orchestra meanwhile played "tag" and "hunkadee" with one another by means of their various instruments, and made frantic efforts to catch up with one another and come in all together at the finale. The audience was of that illegitimate character which stamps matinee audiences of a Saturday. There was the man-about-town ogling the fancy woman; there was the embryo thief gloating on the gambler's diamonded finger; there was the novel assemblage of hardy women, with brazen relentless brows, and heavy-moustached men with gaudy scarfs and neckties, and of a "pursy" roundness of figure. The aroma of fast life pervaded everything. Certain owners of property along Broadway have begun to tremble under the impression that an Arcade Railroad is soon to be begun along that thoroughfare, which means that the whole length of Broadway is to be dug out to a depth of seventeen feet, the space to be roofed over and lined with a double railroad track. If it is all likely that the Legislature will charter a bill for a railway of this kind, what a pity that more than half a million of dollars has already been laid out in repaving Broadway! The pavers have been hard at work ever since last summer, and now it seems (if the report be true) that all they have done is to be undone.

Well, there was an underground railroad chartered last year, and that fell through because there was not enough money to put it through. Now if any one railroad is more expensive than another, that one is the Arcade Railroad; and the question not unnaturally occurs, if a less expensive one was not to be thought of, what are the chances for a more expensive one? Broadway, besides, is a street that has some few gas-pipes and water pipes in it, so that the benefits to be derived from the proposed railroad ought to be very great to overbalance the inconveniences and expense incurred in its construction.

Captain John S. Young, of the New York detective police, yesterday handed in his resignation. He felt compelled to do this because of the recent action of the Police Commissioners in requesting him to hand over to them all sums received by him as rewards since the first of January. The cause of the proceeding was Captain Young's reception of $15,000 from the detective firm of Smith, Peterson & West, in Baltimore, for services rendered by him to them in the capture of Weaver and McQuade, two of the parties who recently robbed the New Windsor Bank, Maryland, of $120,000 in United States and Pacific Railroad bonds. The Commissioners found occasion to make the request on Captain Young's refusal to hand over to one of his employees, named Irving, a certain sum which Irving claims as his due. When Young engaged this man he agreed to pay him $100 for his one day's work, but he was five times better than his work, and paid him $500. Irving conceiving, in a streak of impetuous ambition, that he and his principal ought to proceed on the rule of "share and share alike," turned up his nose at the insignificant $500, and laid the case, such as it was, before the Commissioners, who hold securities, and, as a matter of course, make every one else's position as hard as possible. In losing Captain Young the detective force has lost a good man. He has the look of a detective about him. The burglar, the sneak-thief, the confidence man, the sinner in secret—whose only difference from detected criminals is that he is not found out yet, know afar off the "cut" of Captain Young's "jib." That ferocious complexion, those sharp blue eyes, those trim-set sandy whiskers, the bluff to the point manner, that Henry-the-Eighth ensemble, are not easily forgotten when one has once been familiar with them.

When one remembers the number of boys between twelve and sixteen years old that are employed as errand boys, cash boys, etc., and the wretched salaries which some young men much older than sixteen receive, one philanthropically longs for a Peabody who shall take an interest in the adolescent element of an immense city like New York, and provide them with the means for "rational amusement" (on the Henry Ward Beecher plan) for the evening. There are at least between 20,000 and 25,000 boys in New York who attend no school, and whose wages, varying from $3 to $5, are presumed to pay all their expenses. They are boys elevated by several degrees above the Parisian gamin thousands of them belong to irreproachable parents, and such are in the main safely provided for in the evenings, no matter how poor the home may be in which they live. The remaining thousands, however, are drifting on into shiftless and thriftless, if not actually criminal, men. Their wages are very disproportionate to the responsible positions they hold, for any position the holder of which is entrusted with the care of sums varying from $5000 to $50,000, involves more or less responsibility. Yet in spite of these humble wages and of the poor circumstances of the boys' parents, go where you will, almost, you are sure of finding some specimens of this sphere of boyhood. You see them at matinees and Sunday concerts. They adorn the cafes and the theatres. They all but monopolize billiard and lager-beer saloons, and not a few upon whom the precocity of his gifts has become so manifest itself are the objects of the "roper" in tender attentions. The boy of the period demands amusement, and in providing it for himself ransacks his master's till.

For a list of Charriers (not Carriers) are the two opera buffo singers who suffered such a fate from no-talents that they became oblivious alike of character and of credit, and took French leave (being bound for Havre) last Tuesday. Mr. E. G. Gorman, and Mr. Owen Marlowe appeared in "Wreck" in "Wreck." Both have good parts. Miss Suppelia enacted the heroine, and giving none of the audience reason to be incoherently at Miss Rose Eytzinger's not putting in an appearance. Miss Kellogg foists Faust upon us for the last time this evening. ALT BARR.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

Jannushek as "Mary Stuart."

Franklin Fanny Jannushek, with her company of German artists, commenced a brief season last evening at the Academy of Music, and appeared in Schiller's fine tragedy Mary Stuart. An audience that would have seemed large at any of the theatres was in attendance, and the actress was applauded with much enthusiasm throughout the performance. Jannushek is an artist that must be seen often to be thoroughly appreciated. She has a noble style of acting; a little rugged perhaps it may appear at first, especially when compared with the finely polished efforts of Ristori, but its intrinsic merits and true artistic qualities grow more apparent upon acquaintance, and as it is studied and understood. She does not give that fine shading and delicate characterization that distinguished Ristori, but there is a fervor and a passionate earnestness in all her personations that appeal in the strongest manner to the sympathies and feelings of her auditors.

Schiller's Mary Stuart is a fascinating poem for the closet, and the character of the unfortunate Scottish queen is a carefully elaborated and most poetical conception. In representation, however, the want of action in the drama is a defect of no little moment; and the long speeches in which it abounds are more suitable for elocutionary exercises than for legitimate acting. In spite of these defects, however, the tragedy has held its place upon the stage, and the character of "Mary Stuart" has been a favorite with such artists as Rachel and Ristori, while it has been, and probably always will be, one of the leading roles with the best actresses on the German stage. Our playgoers have had opportunities within the past two or three years to see this part attempted by Ristori, Mrs. Lander, Mrs. Bowers, and Jannushek. Each of these artists interprets it somewhat differently, and each has particular excellences.

Jannushek, by her vigor and energy, to a great extent supplies the action which is lacking in the play itself—at least makes it less apparent; and in this manner she produces a more decided effect upon the audience. In the whole of the somewhat tedious scenes of the first act, she was admirable last evening, while the famous quarrel scene, in the third act, which it is so easy to make a mere vulgar scolding match, she managed with such true dignity and genuine passion as to give it all the grand effect that the author designed. Jannushek is supported by a competent company, in some respects superior to the one she had with her when she last visited this city. Franklin Slegmann, who sustained the part of "Queen Elizabeth," is a capable actress, but not equal to Franklin Singer, an artist of remarkably fine abilities and culture, who first appeared in it here as a support to Jannushek.

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC Franklin Fanny Jannushek and her German troupe will appear this evening in the drama of Marianne; or the Woman of the People. THE THEATRE COMIQUE The Japanese troupe will appear this evening in some of their most interesting feats. AT THE AMERICAN A fine miscellaneous entertainment will be given this evening. THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY'S CONCERT.—The third grand concert of the Philharmonic Society, which was given on Saturday evening at the Academy of Music, was in many respects the best of the season. The programme was excellent, and the orchestral forces were in good training. A large audience was in attendance, and the applause was hearty throughout. The chief feature was Beethoven's "Pastorale Symphony," a beautiful and simple composition, which was rendered by the orchestra in such a manner as to excite the enthusiasm of the audience. Mendelssohn's overture, "Meerstille," was also given in excellent style. The performance of Mr. S. B. Mills, of New York, on the Weber grand piano, were much applauded. His playing of Chopin's Concerto in E minor, with orchestral accompaniment, and the "Hungarian Gipsy Melody" was entitled to warm commendation. One great deficiency of the previous concert of the Philharmonic Society was the absence of any vocalism, as a relief to the long instrumental programme. This deficiency was supplied on Saturday evening by the Young Men's Chorus Society, who sang Storch's chorus of "Green" in admirable style, and the audience were so well pleased that doubtless this feature will be repeated in future entertainments.

The Philharmonic Society should receive the liberal support of our own citizens. It is composed of gentlemen who are engaged in their profession, and their efforts to entertain a taste for the best music, by giving the best compositions in the best style, are worthy of all encouragement. A decided improvement has been perceptible at each succeeding concert given by the Society, and those to be given in the future can be looked forward to with interest. The concert given on Wednesday evening, March 24, will deliver his lecture on "Circumstances of the Academy of Music on Monday evening next. The sale of seats will commence to-morrow. J. LEBLANC, Esq., assisted by Mr. F. A. Goss, will give a reading of Shakespeare on Thursday evening next, for the benefit of the Children's Home, Lancaster.
